

Introduction

The existence of The Protocol for World Peace: A Prototype rests on the assumption that the secret to world peace is a discoverable pattern of ideas, and that this pattern is concealed, in whole or in part, in the written texts and vocalized or signed methods of communication presently in use throughout the world.

The words of this process themselves become data for the purpose of analysis; and it follows that since the conceived data array is known to be (because on-going) of an infinite mass, the analytic methods to be followed must necessarily involve some form of programmable computerization.

My part in all this has been to establish the initial sequence of events having to do with the collection of the data itself setting parameters for the collection in time and space and determining the nature of its authorship—everything except designing the programs suitable for its execution. Consequently:

1. The existence was postulated of a permanently progressive and fundamental change in organizational conceptualization, after which it became impossible to return to a world dominated by horse, wagon and sail, and which for want of a better term could be defined by the single term, Modernity.

2. The spatial components of this change were the 20th century (measured in time from 1901-2000; and a 19th century whose data collection time would stretch back to about 1680. This would be necessary because it was further thought that

a. the entirety of Modernity must embrace the whole of the Industrial Revolution, in its mechanical as well as technological and digital phases;

b. that this must logically begin with the systematic mechanization of the most basic concerns of human activity—food and occupation—and that this would naturally lead to

(1) the discovery (in the West) by Jethro Tull of the mechanical seed drill (1701); that

(2) the first practical application of coke as a fuel in a blast furnace to produce inexpensive iron ore capable of withstanding extremes of exterior heat and cold without fracturing (by Abraham Darby (1709); and that

(3) twenty years or so should be allowed for these ideas to gestate in the minds of their inventors.

3. Two races of humankind inhabiting this world from time immemorial, and they being essentially equivalent in number of individuals (though all else about them be fundamentally different in actualization of potential) they should be represented in equivalent numbers in each century; and so it was done—equal numbers of male and female authors for the entire time period and equal numbers of male and female authors to represent each century. [In the event, out of the 10,568 titles available from 6,300 male and 4,300 female authors of the English and non-English items of literature actually considered for use, the Protocol actually formed a matrix of 49,539 pages of text (out of a total of 63,560 pages) written by 6,590 authors.]

4. Though the dominant language of analysis must necessarily be English, since I am monolingual, this prototype must contain some sort of depth in other languages of both East and West since there must be some sort of linguistic control over the dominant communication form—that what might be discovered in one, if discovered in others, might lead to the better solving of the question of world peace. This grew over 17 years to the following, final summation. (The individual components in the table are organized by the file number in which the literature actually appears; numbers at the end of each entry represent approximate numbers of pages in the item; enhanced names indicate female authors.)

CUMULATIVE STATISTICS DISPLAYING THE NUMBER OF PAGES, THE NUMBER OF INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES, AND THE NUMBER OF MALE AND FEMALE AUTHORS FOR EACH ARCHIVE

The collection of texts, from which the materials for the data base of The Protocol for World Peace were abstracted, was begun on January 1, 2000, and the finishing work on the final portion of this effort—the Five Governing Indices (World Introduction, Table of Contents, Authors A-Z, Bibliography, and Archives)—was completed two weeks prior to its official due date (Christmas Day, 2017).

If you are a computer programmer, and believe possible to design a software methodology that could discover the answer to world peace through linguistic analysis, please do not hesitate to make use of the enclosed literature entitled in the Table of Contents and available in the files accompanying each country. All I ask of you is that you make your findings freely available to anyone involved in similar research.

276. 276:1-276:197 197 21 16 5 Space was left for the completion of the text for title 276.145—A Narrative Of The Shipwreck, Captivity And Sufferings Of Horace Holden and Benj. H. Nute: Who Were Cast Away In The American Ship Mentor On The Pelew Islands, In The Year 1832 And For Two Years Afterwards Were Subjected To Unheard Of Sufferings Among The Barbarous Inhabitants Of Lord North's Island—by Horace Holden (1810-after 1902) of Hillsborough, New Hampshire;

but it was never used. Pages 198-229 contain an unedited acceptance speech by Kamarakhanda (1904-1998) of Dhaka, Bangladesh, on being awarded the Tagore Literacy Award for 1995; some unedited Burmese poetry taken from the Internet; various unedited articles and notes on Kazak authors (some in Russian); and some prose material authored by the former North Korean political prisoner Shin In-geunn (1982-) whose testimony appears in the collection of 20th century authors for North Korea.

281.	281:1-281:225	247	27	17	10	Pages 225-247 contain a set of 21 unedited Hausa folktales, the editing of which was ultimately finished at the time the literature was transferred to its appropriate place in the section reserved for 19 th century Nigeria.
282a.	282a:1-146	203	2	2	0	This file contains two complete compositions (one in Malay and one in English translation, numbered 282a.1 and 282a.146 respectively) and two additional but incomplete fragments of two Malay compositions in an addenda at the end of the file. The second of these was an attempt to transcribe the text of 282a.1 from its original, which I abandoned in favor of reproducing it in its entirety as page images; the first was a similar attempt at the transcription of an otherwise unlisted text, Syair Perjalanan Sultan Lingga Dan Yang Dipertuan Muda Riau Pergi Ke Singapura Dan Peri Keindahan Istana Sultan Johor Yang Amat Elok , made by Khalid Hitam bin Raja Hasan al Haji (1870-1933), which I also abandoned because of the flawed nature of its original. In the event neither of them was used.
282b.	282b:1-179	190	6	5	1	This file contains six writings, of which the last (Tjerita Nji Paina) appears to be missing its last page.

285.	285:1-285:124	132	27	23	4	On pages 132-151 is preserved a 20 th century chronology of Chinese authors, still incomplete but in a very advanced form and dating from only a few years ago.
286.						File 286 contains a list of authors born in what is now Bangladesh; a chronology of US authors from several years ago; lists of library cards from various Cornell libraries; and an unfortunately unprintable excerpt from Nove: Roman , by Jelena J. Dimitrijevic (1862-1945), born in Krusevac, Rasina District, Serbia.

5. The spatial components of the field having been explained, it remains to outline the collecting points themselves. These, of course, would be the literary deposits of the political units, which, in this case, include the 193 members of the United Nations, plus Vatican State (sovereign since 1922), Taiwan (sovereign on the island of Formosa) and the all-but-recognized sovereignty of the Republic of Kosovo.

6. These would all be represented according to a strict limit of one piece of literature per million citizens, with a guarantee of two for each country that did not yet contain a million people within its borders. Three political units were exempted from this regulation, in order to increase the number of English-language samples.

a. In The United Kingdom, it was decided to replace provincial representation with representation by Parliamentary electoral district.

b. In Canada, the figures for provincial population were rounded up to better represent their respective provinces, to include a place for the national capital, and to provide an even number

c. In the United States of America, state was treated as if it were a sovereign country and (my pride here) every county in New York State was also represented by a native author. [The authors for the United States in the table below (except for those those earliest born for each state in each century) are represented by the last two digits of their birth-years; "b." in the table means "born before"] The detailed results for the United States are as follows:

26a.¹ and 1a.¹. A few years after I thought I had completed the settlement of literature for my state, I realized that I had neglected to include two names.

The first of these, Mrs. Mary Calista (Whittemore) Nichols, was the grandmother of the man who has graciously driven me back and forth from Corning to Ithaca twice a month for over two years, in fair weather and foul, and largely at his own expense. This is my way of saying thank you; since, without his help, the data phase of The Protocol for World Peace: The Prototype could never have been completed.

It should never be forgotten that the bright light of the living soul is everywhere manifested; as long as The Protocol exists, it must also include the name of Tupac Amaru Shakur, or be forever wanting one of the most graphic displays of its most important truth: that without contact with those who are, to use his word, Positive—by which he means in touch with love—life itself is without meaning, and its practice becomes a waste of time.

Mrs. Nichols (26a.¹) and Grandma Moses (26.); Mr. Shakur (1a¹) and Washington Irving (1.): separated by decades, united by love: and all four born in New York. What beauty there is in this!

62a¹. H was not born in Steuben County, but he regards Bath, New York, the county seat, as his home town, for though he was born in Chicago, Illinois, his parents moved him to Bath when he was barely 2½ years old, and he feels himself very much at home in its collection of farms and mountains and forests and small towns. He doubts whether there is any place in the entire world so beautiful.

On the other hand, while this is the place I was raised in—specifically, in Bath, the county seat—it is not the place of my birth. If I was inclined to contribute a selection of my writings to the Protocol, it would have to be under the construct of Illinois, for I was born in Cook County General Hospital, in Chicago, and for the first 2½ years or so of my life I lived in various places in that city, largely in the suburb of Elmhurst. However, I have thought that the county where I was raised should be honored by a special reservation devoted to the literary work of a person whose contribution to the welfare of the local marginalized population, over the course of many years, deserves a special accolade.

* = indicates where male authors were added to make up the required number of authors. special exception (for which see under the country in the Table of Contents). v.s.f. = vacant so far. ⁴No sexual differentiation seems to be possible here. State policy in the U.A.E.

* Abbreviations: C = century; c. = about; b. = before; l. = late; m,f = male, female. *The Israel/Palestine agglomeration is regarded as a single state still coalescing, and is therefore represented only proportionally by population, at a ratio of 6:4. I can locate the book titles and publishing houses for the Jordanian author Julia Marar Sawalha (1905- , 6 novels) but no libraries where they might be found. ***

E.g., I could locate no Afghani 19th century female authors; so to at least keep the number of authors equal between the centuries I substituted male authors here. Similarly in 19th century Vietnam, 19th and 20th century Kazakhstan, etc.

7. It was also thought necessary to include the remnants of the former European colonial empires, and the non-sovereign populated entities of modern states (e.g., the Realm of New Zealand), resulting in the following table:

8. As to the countries themselves, for the sake of textual simplicity, no differentiation is made of political divisions below the first level beneath the national government itself. This first level includes territorial units styled counties, cantons, prefectures, governorates, parishes, communes, municipalities, shires, voivode-ships (so Poland), federal subjects (so Russia), oblasts, and emirates; provinces, autonomous provinces; administrative divisions, major divisions; regions, historical regions, traditional regions; districts, electoral districts, administrative districts, political districts; states, regional states, federal states, free and sovereign states; island groups, local government areas and one special territory.

It is otherwise with the images of churches, mosques, temples and synagogues, which were supplied in every case for the sake of visual illustration, and where every effort has been made to discover their local identities. In the case of 11 of the 196 countries it was found impossible to complete this pictorial; and that fact is noted by the name of the political division in closed brackets.

The size of each country is measured after each name in terms of megabytes and normally by pages.

Bosnia and Herzegovina, 22 ... 65.2m/80 (17 locations) The political divisions of Bosnia and Herzegovina were created by the Dayton Agreement, which recognized a second tier of government in Bosnia and Herzegovina, comprising two entities: the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with mostly Bosniaks and Croats, and the Republika Srpska with mostly Serbs. Each governing body controls roughly one half of the state's territory. The Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina itself has a federal structure and consists of 10 autonomous cantons. The organizational structure of the Republika Srpska is organized into 7 regions. Bosnia and Herzegovina is the national governmental authority over both.

Israel and Palestine, 82 ... 27.2m/91(The Protocol regards Israel and Palestine as a single country still in the process of formation. As a result, the sub-administrative political units of the State of Israel and the (as yet territorially non-actualized and thus theoretical) State of Palestine can have only a hypothetical meaning to the future country. On the other hand, speculative forecasting is not the business of the Protocol, while an as accurate as possible reflection of the present political realities and ambitions is. The politics of this country-in-the-making being essentially a conversation between Arabs and Jews, the literature reflects authors from those two groups only—for the Arab authors, a representation of the hegemony Gaza/Nablus/Hebron/Jerusalem; and for the Jews, Northern District/Central District/Tel Aviv/Jerusalem (with a special reservation for the earliest rural socialist farming moshavim, hence Ein Ganin). Thus the official division of the State of Israel into 7 administrative units and that of the State of Palestine into 16 administrative divisions is ignored; and since they share the same land mass these political artifices are essentially meaningless for the purposes of the Protocol. The division between the sexes for the authors of both the Arab and Jewish populations has been maintained, although their equal sexual representation in the 19th and 20th centuries, together with the equal numbers of writers representing each century, was thought to be an unnecessary complication, since there is as yet no settled nation-state)

Somalia/Puntland/Khatumo/Somaliland, 158 14.2m/98 In 1991 the republican government that had ruled this territory (formed from its pre-existing contiguous British and Italian territorial colonies) since independence in 1961, collapsed, and a period of civil war ensued; the initial chaos has subsided, but at this moment there are four self-declared successor states occupying various parts of the territory originally under the control of the Independence Government. The internal Independence Government provincial boundaries have become a thing of the past, and even the frontiers of the member successor-states have themselves become somewhat fluid, thanks to the ebb and flow of local political allegiances. These allegiances are for the most part based on clan loyalty, rather than on political party; and on that basis it appears that the region now known as Puntland—though in itself a very small fragment of the original Somalia—possesses the most stable collection of these loyalties, and so enjoys the most stable grouping of permanent internal boundaries at the provincial level. (Terrorist groups launch occasional destabilizing military incursions, but these appear to have no permanent effect on the control of the region by the Puntland government.) The other three competing successor-states have, since Puntland declared its regional independence in 1998, lost territory to the Puntland federation. That being the case, I have chosen to illustrate religious buildings from only this particular successor-state. At the present time (September 16, 2017) Puntland appears to effectively control some 82,000 square miles of the territory occupied by the former Independence Government. The constituent provinces are (1) Gardafuul (the political capital of the State, with its base of operations at Aluula); (2) Cayn (Buuhoodle); (3) Bari (Bosaso); (4) Karkaar (Qardho); (5) Haylaan (Dhahar); (6) Mudug (Galkayo); (7) Nugal (Garowe); (8) Sanaag (Las Qorey); and (9) Sool (Las Anod).

(In addition, a special exception was made in order to represent each county in New York State, the state H was raised in.) The same system was applied to the District of Colombia and the five inhabited overseas territories of Puerto Rico, the Northern Marianas, the Virgin Islands, Guam and American Samoa.

A final word.

I can not imagine a circumstance in which it will be necessary—from the point of view of the contents of this torrent—for anyone in Internetland to contact me. My job with the Protocol has been to gather the material for you to work with: my job is finished.

But further than that:

I am personally the antithesis of computer literacy, and will remain so.

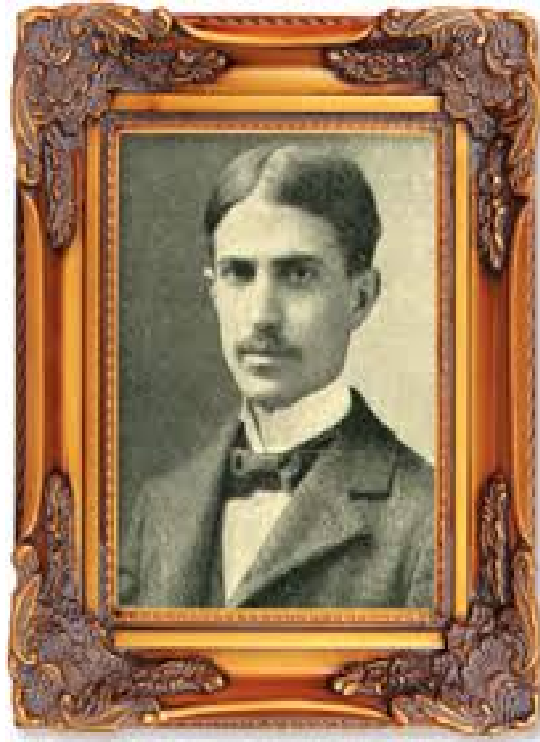

On May 17, 2018, I will be 75. My natural tendency is to withdraw as far as possible from contact with this world in its present format—a world which I see on the cusp of mutually- and unconsciously-arranged suicide.

I have never had any sort of secretarial staff or office;

I am not a member of any literary organization;

I never make use of e-mail.

The only thing I want you out there to do is design the necessary methodology so that the answer to world peace may be discovered before we blow ourselves to smithereens.

AFTERWORD AND RECAPITULATION

President Kennedy greeting the first Peace Corps Volunteers (from my generation!).

“Our problems are man-made, therefore they may be solved by man.
No problem of human destiny is beyond human beings.”
June 10, 1963

President Kennedy was the first President I could vote for. That was a long time ago, and in a very different world, but I remember it like it was yesterday—which, it was, in a way—“I”, Horace Herbert Bradley, the “H” of the footnotes and the photograph below (I was in my 40s then). I don’t know if my little effort will make a difference in the cause of world peace, but my President was right: everyone should try. My last act in these pages is to dedicate them to my own literary hero: William of Malmesbury (c.1095-c.1143). I hope my work does you honour. (02/26/18)

Of course, the most important part of this work is the definition and realization of the overall concept.

It seems self-evident that the Divinity who made us would not leave us powerless to avoid the mutual self-destruction inherent in the anger of nuclear war—that the gift of intelligence does not imply an inherent liability towards stupidity in its use—and also that the solution to this problem now, with the power of the computer, lies finally within human power to discover.

But how to do it; what are the parameters which will result in teasing our intelligence into the perpetual contemplation of peace in all its forms?

First: that the literary data base be broad enough to encompass all the nations of the known world, including any dependencies which they may still retain an encompassing dominion;

Then, that it be deep enough to be able to submerge the inevitable exceptions-to-rule which arise from time to time, and which must be honored, but in such a manner as not to deflect the governing postulates—the guidelines—of the entire work;

Then, that its gathering be decentralized enough to ensure the broadest possible differentiation of authorial birthplace—so that there be a proportional representation inherent in the data between experiences involving cities and those involving town and country as the dominant character of the literary creators;

Then, that it be throughout of a normal construction—free of experimental tendencies—in order not to confuse computational discovery, but to provide as clear a pathway as possible to what ever the ultimate results may be;

Then, that it be treated always as an experiment to be proven, not as a collection from which to seek pleasure, and so provided with its own set of linguistic variants to the dominant English base—so that if something is discovered of a positive yield in English, there is at hand the means by which such a discovery could be uncovered in some place in the non-English world, and therefore regarded as a true part of the final solution to the entire problem;

Then, that there be no preset topic of literary preference in the mind of the Compiler, but that the pool of literary choice be accessed on the basis of that which first presents itself to be selected, irrespective of topic, to avoid biasing the entire set, and thus skewing the results in an artificial manner;

And finally that the organizational rules be five in number:

That the works be created by an equal number of men and an equal number of women, and by an equal number of each sex in each century—1680-1899 and 1900-2000 in terms of birth-years of the authors;

That an equal number of works be taken from the 19th as well as from the 20th century;

That they be taken from poetry as well as prose;

That the field of choice be limited to the period of time from the advent of the industrial revolution to its continued manifestation in the technological and digital ages through which we are now passing—or from about 1680 to the year 2000;

That each country be represented at the ratio of at least one piece of literature for every million people accorded to each country in the year 2000, with a guarantee of two such for those countries that by the year 2000 did not yet encompass at least a million people living within its borders.

It may also be important that, from its inception, only one person has been involved in the creation of this project—at least from the point of view that the application of the aforementioned considerations has been, of necessity, constantly in his purview and his alone, and that as a consequence of this singularity he was able to so internalize these requirements that their practical exercise became one of virtually automatic response to stimuli.

For seventeen years come December 31, 2017, this has been my central occupation. Having been fortunate enough to have been provided more or less gratis with the material necessities of life, outside of relatively steady though casual employment my time has been my own to spend, and so I have been able to concentrate the entirety of my powers in such a way as to be able to continually enforce the requirements of this compilation without recourse to the inevitable deviancies from original planning involved in considering input from anyone else. This has meant having to live with the consequences of sole responsibility. But it has also—and much more importantly—meant achieving an ability to automatically respond (in hundreds of ways, every day for thousands of days) to questions of program change with the singular achievable purity of Keeping To The Original Design.

If I have been able to do that successfully, then the prototype, in and of itself, will be able to provide the world with a system flexible enough to yield a perpetual state of mental peace and mutual harmony for time immemorial, not only between individuals, but the nations of which they are the fundamental component: ☺ H ☺
